THE STORY IN 150 WORDS

Dos Búhos is a family winery at 6,500 feet in the high desert of central Mexico — three hours north of Mexico City, and nothing like Baja.

Higinio and Diane Maycotte planted the first vines in 2006 at the foot of the dormant volcano Palo Huérfano, on land the family had already farmed organically for decades: pears, peaches, vegetables. Nobody could tell them what would grow at that altitude, so they planted twelve varieties and let the land decide.

Twenty vintages later the answers are in the bottle: an Aglianico that keeps its acid through long, cold nights; a Chenin Blanc with limestone tension; an orange wine from Moscato Giallo. Certified organic by Oregon Tilth since 2014 and fermented with native yeasts in amphora and neutral oak, the wines are poured at Pujol, Quintonil, Nobu and Rosewood and imported to the United States. Four generations work the land. The motto: better wines for a better world.

SHORT VERSION

A family winery at 6,500 feet in central Mexico, organic since before the vines, making Aglianico, Chenin Blanc and orange wine at the foot of a sleeping volcano. Poured at Pujol and Quintonil; imported to the US.

THE LONGER STORY

Four generations, one land

The land has been in the family for more than sixty years. A great-grandfather farmed it, grandparents dreamed on it, Higinio and Diane planted the vines in 2006, and their children now walk the rows with children of their own. Every harvest continues a family story that began long before the first bottle.

Where nature leads

The vineyard has always been organic: no synthetic chemicals, ever. It is certified by Oregon Tilth to USDA organic standards and farmed for biodiversity. The owls the winery is named for are not just a symbol; they are part of the living ecosystem in the fields. Twelve varieties went in as a trial in 2006; today the vineyard grows more than fifteen.

In the cellar

Minimal intervention: native or carefully selected yeasts, gentle filtration, patient ageing. When the grapes are grown right, the wine needs time and attention more than help.

A gathering place

Dos Búhos is also a restaurant, a wine garden and a place for events, from small weddings to charity dinners. The family works with local artists, musicians, craftspeople, chefs and educators, and gives back to San Miguel quietly and consistently.

Art among the vines

Work by local artists hangs in the tasting room and appears on the labels. In the historic chapel, Contemplo presents immersive video art, and an artist residency brings creators from around the world to live and work among the vines.

What they've written

> Probably one of the best wineries in Mexico. While Valle de Guadalupe is the country's most acclaimed wine region, Dos Búhos sits in relatively unknown San Miguel de Allende, at 2,000 metres, farming sustainably and making wine with minimal intervention.
> ROBERT VERNICK · WINE TERROIR

> Some say San Miguel de Allende has some of the best soil for the vine in the whole country. This winery is the proof.
> ALEJANDRA NARANJO · FOOD & WINE

> Dos Búhos is a dream and a collective journey: what began as a restlessness to create something tangible, unique and lasting opened the doors to this fascinating labyrinth of creativity, passion and diversity.
